In his presentation, Mr Dadang emphasized several important points such as: (1) the chances of being accepted by Indonesian students were quite large and the historical linkages between the Philippines and Indonesia from the colonial period gave a similar breath to Indonesia. The schools in the Philippines themselves have received ISO certificates and public schools in the Philippines are not money-oriented; (2) The Philippines is attractive to international students because English is used as an introduction and English which is the result of US influence making the Philippines the 3rd largest English speaking country in the world. Universities in the Philippines themselves have international professors and instructors who are capable in their fields. Mr. Dadang also presented several comparative case studies of various public and private universities in the Philippines based on the results of CHED's research. Mr. Dadang also explained the conditions and the support given by the Philippine government to study abroad.

The presentation was then continued by Mr. Indra Kusumah, Ph.D, who emphasized that Indonesians have the power to adapt when studying in Europe, especially in Germany. Germany itself has high quality and cheap tuition fees, as well as easy-to-obtain halal food and many job opportunities and scholarships available in Germany. Mr. Indra also explained about the need for workers in Germany and in the European Union as well as favorite sectors that Indonesian students can explore while having a career in Germany during their studies. The amount of income in Germany itself varies, but it can meet basic daily needs and the systematics of the education level process itself was also explained by Mr. Indra from the Bachelor to Doctoral level. The webinar itself was followed by a discussion session in which students and staff from UPNVJ participated to ask questions about challenges and opportunities for scholarships, opportunities for collaboration between universities, and what would be described about research, work, and what needs to be considered.
